

Kathryn Pellegrini is the Director of Research Projects at the Yerkes Genomics Core at Emory University working to make next generation sequencing accessible to all members of the Emory research community. Kathryn completed her PhD at the University of Western Australia in 2011, followed by postdoctoral research fellowships at Harvard University and Emory University investigating the use of sequencing for identification of biomarkers for kidney disease and prostate cancer, before joining the Yerkes Genomics Core in 2018.